POSTER ART OF THE WORLD

A TRAVELLING EXHIBITION ORGANIZED BY

THE ROYAL ONTARIO MUSEUM - TORONTO

APR 6 - MAY 29, 1960

NOTE

The posters in this exhibition have been selected from close to four thousand submitted from all parts of the world. It is inevitable that with such a reduction some artists, and even some countries that we would have preferred to include, have been omitted.

Catalogue descriptions are confined to artist, country and date, subject, sponsor (and country, where this differs from that of the artist), printer, technique and dimensions (height by width). Where these are omitted the compilers either lacked the requisite information or there was an element of doubt.-Editor.

FOREWORD

Several years ago Mr. John Hillen, Display Chief of the Earth Sciences Division of this Museum, suggested to the Director and myself that we hold a large and important exhibition of world poster art. With our approval, tentative though it was (for we had no means of knowing, at the time, what response he would have from governments and poster designers throughout the world), Mr. Hillen proceeded to make his contacts and to collect the posters. A visit to Europe opened up many new and broader vistas and the material began to flow in. He was able to obtain not only the blessing but the active cooperation of many of the specialists in Europe and through them made new contacts behind the Iron and the Bamboo Curtains and in all corners of the world.

Our ideas began to grow and take clearer form as the posters accumulated by their hundreds and then by their thousands. Finally, about a year ago, we began to come to grips with the problems of selection, arrangement, display, publicity, catalogue and all those other concomitants of a large and important exhibition. Through all this, John Hillen has been the Figaro, the indefatigable worker and idea-man, either on his own or as a member of committees. Without his energy, taste and continuing attention to detail, the present exhibition could not have been presented. Without his initiative, a poster show would probably not even have been contemplated.

Mr. Hillen has had the full responsibility for bringing the posters together. I know that he would want me to extend, not only on his own behalf but for the Museum as a whole, our appreciation to all those who have given so freely of their time and interest. Without the invaluable assistance of Miss Mary Q. Dench of the Information Division of the Department of External Affairs in Ottawa, and of Miss Kim Taylor, the Assistant Editor of "Graphis", (the distinguished Zurich journal dealing with graphic arts throughout the world), it would have been impossible to enlist the cooperation of so many well-known poster artists and so many countries, and to obtain the abundance and variety of poster materials which we have. Our special gratitude goes to Professor Fabigan of Vienna, whose enthusiasm for our project and many letters to colleagues in all parts of the world on behalf of our undertaking have helped greatly to establish the high quality of the exhibition. Mr. Frank Newfeld, the president of The Society of Typographic Designers of Canada, has been our intermediary with many Canadian and American poster producers. Mention should also be made of the several private lenders to the exhibition, notably Mr. and Mrs. Samuel J. Zacks and Mr. and Mrs. R. W. Finlayson of Toronto, Mrs. Edith Gregor Halpert of New York and Monsieur R. G. Michel of Paris.

Dr. T. A. Heinrich, the Director of the Royal Ontario Museum, has been an enthusiastic poster-fancier for many years. Not only has he given support and advice to the production of this exhibition but he has taken personal responsibility for the assembling of a group of what he persists in calling "incunabula", i.e. early posters of quality or those which embody the work of men whose reputations have been made, generally, in the field of pure art rather than in poster-art. This group provides a most illuminating complement to the main exhibition for it provides the dimension of depth—a means of showing that the poster can be more than ephemeral and that the contemporary poster has not sprung fully grown and developed—like Athena—into its present maturity. Unfortunately this group, because of its rarity and fragility, can only be shown in Toronto and at the Vancouver Festival.

The exhibition is entitled "Impact". After long discussion we felt that this title most clearly expressed the purpose and the actual effect of the poster. It is a form of communication much neglected in this country and the United States, but the display of these examples, drawn from all over the world, must force the beholder to realize what he is now missing. For advertisers and publicity men they should provide a challenge, and the incentive to explore the possibilities of this great medium. At the very least they could provide our often-drab streets with the spots of colour and a focus for the seeking eye which our cities so sadly lack.

A. D. TUSHINGHAM, Head,
Art and Archaeology Division.

INTRODUCTION

In Glasgow, around the year 1870, two fat pigs used to waddle along the same street each morning until they came to a certain shop. They would then lie down on the sidewalk, causing an obstruction to passers-by who were thus forced to read the message painted on their backs. It was never very long before somebody remarked on the fact that the name on their backs was the same as the one on the shop behind them.

The owner, a Mr. Lipton, disclosed many years later, when he had become the yachting tea-magnate, Sir Thomas Lipton, that "If you want to sell a great many more goods than the man next door, you have to make a lot of people look at them, whether they want to or not".

Though "pigs as posters" is an exotic example of the forcing of attention, there seems to be little doubt that the poster in one form or another is the oldest form of advertising. The Egyptians used them to track down runaway slaves. The Romans used small wooden boards, "tabellae", which were attached to pillars or posts in the market-places. In Herculaneum, which was buried under lava and ashes in the year A.D. 79, archaeologists have found what are perhaps the oldest surviving commercial advertisements in the world; among other examples the sign of an inn-keeper, on which two slaves carry a big wine-vessel, and a sign from a shoe-shop.

In mediaeval times town criers and heralds took the place of writing. It is only since the printing press has become common that the poster has come into more general use and largely replaced them.

We in Canada and the United States know very little of this use at this moment. We pride ourselves on the diversity, the scope and the impact of our systems of communication. All of us are influenced, consciously or subconsciously, by the continual flood of newspapers and magazines, radio and television programmes, telephone calls and telegrams, the moving picture and the travelling lecturer. These purvey information and misinformation and most of our publicity and advertising. For good or ill, we cannot complain of lack of communications.

Yet with all of these assaults on our senses and minds, there is still one medium of propaganda (in both the good and bad sense) which has scarcely been touched in these two countries—the vast potential of the poster.

Those who have visited Europe, South America, Asia—in fact everywhere in the world but north of the Rio Grande—remember the poster and the special flavour it imparts to the streets of foreign cities. It is not always a substitute—although in some countries it may be—for other means of communication. It is rather an additional dimension of communication whose prime purpose is to catch the eye of the passer-by. In doing this it transcends all the bounds and restrictions of the spoken language and appeals directly to the understanding, the emotions and the will. In other words its function is to make something known to as large as possible a public through repetition of a printed, and usually illustrated, message. This “something” may be a service, a decree, or a law; it may be merchandise or a theatre announcement. In fact, the Playbill was already in use as early as 1650. Commercial posters began to occur sporadically in the 18th century, but the cost of reproduction, the low level of literacy, and limited merchandising methods all inhibited their widescale use.

When, in 1796, the Bavarian, Aloys Senefelder, discovered the water-repellant, oil-retaining qualities of crayon drawings on limestone, an important principle was added to printing techniques. Its perfection led to the production of the first black and white lithographed posters in about 1828; twenty years later the coloured lithographic poster-print made its debut.

In 1866 the perfection of larger stones and printing-machines enabled the Frenchman, Jules Cheret, to experiment with the poster in the size which is still commonly used, and in the following year, this ‘father of posters’ as he is often called, had begun to attract considerable attention with his advertising posters, among which there was one of Sarah Bernhardt that was especially remarkable for its high degree of skill and technique.

Cheret’s work stood out for its simplicity, purity of colour, and strength. Up to this day these are some of the properties that characterize a good poster. Modern advertising techniques furthermore demand that a poster have impact on a certain group of the public.

In the first place, it must attract attention. Secondly, it must evoke an impulse to act on its message. In the third place, (but not necessarily in all cases) it should direct the impulse to act. Its attraction may at first glance stem from its bold design and bright colours. The main text should be kept as short as possible, so that “he who runs may read”. Then, if it interests him, he will come over to look closer and find out what he can do to satisfy the desire that the poster has awakened in him. A psychological rule that holds for posters as it does for all selling, is that the more work one can make the prospective customer do subconsciously, the less sales-resistance remains. Thus: he looks in passing by, is attracted, stops, comes closer, reads the fine print, remembers what he has to, jots down a telephone number or an address, goes about his business, remembers again, looks at the note he has made, or finds the address or telephone number in the directory, and—finally—writes or telephones or goes. By that time, he has, without being aware of it, broken down so much of his resistance to buy in his desire to do or to have, that the “sale” has been greatly facilitated.

In that way the poster can play a very important role, and this it does by putting the viewer in a receptive mood. Gayness (bright colours), attractiveness (colour and form), impulse to action (form and text), can subconsciously work as a chain-reaction towards doing.

Although this is one of its main purposes, the poster also plays the role of supporting a much wider advertising programme. In that function it tries to establish a picture that will not be forgotten. The clown with the candy on his tongue is a very good example of this type.

If the public goes by at such speed that only a minimum can be read, the poster tends to become a billboard. The billboard is typical of this continent, and is taking an ever-increasing amount of space along the country high- and by-ways in many other lands as well. Alas . . . because, to quote Ogden Nash,

“I think that I shall never see
A billboard lovely as a tree,
Indeed, until the billboards fall
I'll never see a tree at all.”

The poster proper has long since found its established and accepted place in European as well as in many other countries—the city street. This place it holds by law. There are the special poster-boards, which are used on two sides, and multi-angular or round kiosks, which in many cases also serve the dual purpose of being transformer houses. Usually these spaces are owned by the city. They are rented by advertising agencies, who sublet portions to their clients. They thereby guarantee that for the duration of the contract all posters affixed will be replaced at once when soiled or otherwise damaged.

The famous French poster-designer, A. M. Cassandre, once said “Le spectacle est dans la Rue”. As a medium of propaganda, promotion and advertising, the poster has no single equivalent on this continent. Yet streets in the big cities in Europe are no more disorderly in appearance than they are in this country.

Since the poster plays such an important role in European society, its creator is usually a specialized artist in a highly competitive field, who has consciously developed a new art medium to meet the specific requirements of the poster. This is demonstrated by the interest that many famous painters have taken in posters and the outstanding contributions they themselves have made. The role that the poster plays is consequently more than just an advertising medium. The European poster is a daily-changing, open-air display of a highly-entertaining (and usually well-executed) form of public art that people look at, discuss verbally as well as in print, and sometimes even collect.

On life in the street one could say that the poster has, in a more aesthetic way, the effect that a well-known manufacturer claims for a less spiritual product: “It gives you a little lift.”

Commercially the European system seems to work well, if one realizes that in many places in Western Europe the advertisers' demand for desirable space is so great that one often has to book the required sites more than half a year ahead. This is partly due to the way posters are used. Sometimes they are so designed that they are most effective when used in a repetitive pattern: horizontally, vertically, or in blocks. Only then do these achieve their full impact. An excellent example of this technique is the Italian Necchi poster, usually used in blocks of three or four.

In this exhibition posters of all kinds of design and printing techniques are shown. They reflect not only the nature of the artist and craftsman; they mirror also the public for which they are intended. One can find for example an Italian beverage poster of consummate design and colour, intended to persuade its sophisticated viewers to spend money, as well as a Ceylonese governmental poster, where the idea of “saved money forms a backbone” is most graphically illustrated and is intended to persuade its entirely different and predominantly illiterate audience not to spend but to save.

Interesting, too, is the poster published by the government of the Malay Federation on the re-planting of rubber, where the little pictures read from right to left, in contrast to some of the highly sophisticated Japanese and western-European ones.

The techniques involved in the production of posters have been both improved and expanded during the past century. Sometimes a disadvantage has been turned into an asset. An interesting case in point is the printing of pictures by the half-tone process. When a small picture has to be enlarged for a poster, the dots in the screen sometimes become so big that the tonal qualities that were important in the original picture are lost. Designers are quick to note this; they turn the limitation into an advantage. Consciously they start to use the screen-dots on a greatly enlarged scale in their designs, with surprising results. Where the normal poster was visible at a distance of from only 90 to 200 feet, the enlarged screen-dots make it possible to see a picture of the same size clearly at a distance of up to 900 feet. An admixture of colours increases this effect still further, as illustrated here by the "Chemigraphie" poster.

There are several other advertising media in North America that partly overlap the function of the poster as it is known in the old world and which have tended to limit its widespread use here, although they have not entirely eliminated it from serious consideration. The present exhibition is therefore considered to be of importance in the first place for all those people who are interested in, or exposed to advertising design, because it will give an indication of the direction in which this art-form is moving in those many parts of the world where the poster is taken seriously and is a central part of the daily life of the eye.

It is thought to be of value also to all the people who are more closely connected with the business of promotion, advertising and propaganda. The exchange of ideas, techniques and forms of execution can work only for the good, especially if one considers the many cases in which millions of eyes are daily, and sometimes for weeks on end, forced to look at the same mediocre art work because too many advertisers have neither realized their public responsibility nor understood the very real advantages of good design over bad.

In stating this, it is not implied that poor poster-art will not be found in the countries that are represented in this exhibition; there, too, one will find many poor examples. But it does seem that, particularly in Western Europe and Japan, the clients as well as the artists very often put as much stress on the quality of the poster as a form of art as they do on its capacity as a money-maker.

Apart from the great, especially French, painters who have helped to give the poster its present status, and of whom you will find some representation in this exhibition, you will come across also such distinguished professional names as Baszel, Fabigan, Kosel, and Palitzsch of Austria; Sikker-Hansen and Wiinblad of Denmark; Villemot, Jean and Paul Colin, Carlu, Cassandre, Bezombes, and Picart le Doux of France; Henrion, Searle, Enid Marx, and Unger of England; Sandberg, Elffers, and Treumann of the Netherlands; Testa of Italy; Kamekura, Hara, and Tanaka of Japan.

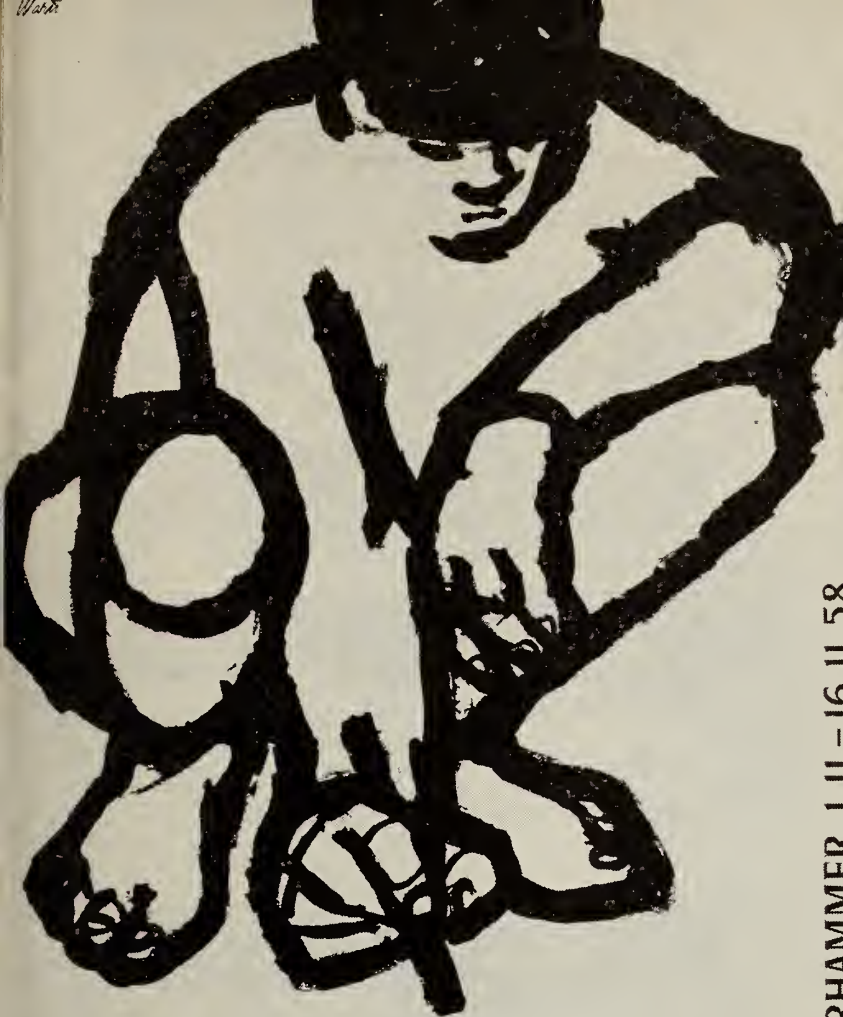

The above names, which enjoy wide celebrity in their own lands, represent really no more than a handful out of literally hundreds of first-class designers who have come to a style of their own and have made strong reputations for themselves. It is interesting, too, that often they work for clients outside their own country, proving that a good product soon finds a wide market.

In contrast to most exhibitions of this kind, where the artists are grouped together under the various countries, you will find that in the present exhibition countries and artists are grouped together under subjects. This has been done to make possible a comparative study of widely variant solutions to basically similar problems. In this way the differences in attitude of the public in different countries toward a similar question also become easily understandable through the work of the artist.

In itself the poster might be considered merely a phenomenon which has its own place in its own setting and is of little concern to us. But the poster has witnessed over the years an evolution which now makes it not only a means of communication but an art form in its own right. Outstanding artists have seen its potential. The posters of Toulouse-Lautrec, for example, are treasured collectors' items. Posters can often enrich the mind and always please the eye. It is in the hope that more such pleasure may be presented to the North American eye that these selected and choice examples are here gathered together and exhibited.

On the thirty-first of October, 1517, a monk by the name of Martin Luther changed the course of all our lives when he affixed the poster with his 95 theses to the door of the castle church in Wittenberg—thus firing the first public shot of the Protestant Reformation. Sometimes posters can play that important a role in human destiny, but that happens, to be sure, only occasionally.

†The Glad Hand Press is strictly a hobby.
 There are never any fees for work or materials used. Virtually all papers and inks are off-cuts and half-cans from large professional printing houses which are enthusiastic about the Glad Hand Press activities. The designing and composition are done directly on the stone, employing no lay-outs or sketches.
